Cultural tourism is a way of uniting peoples from many different backgrounds and growing our respect for one another.

Each of these types of cultural tourism can be connected to all the things visitors need when they travel. From transport, meals and places to stay – all of these visitor needs can become part of a cultural tourism experience.

How will tourism help me?

Keep culture strong

Live and work on country

Share your culture and your story, in your own way

Job pathways for our people

Foster respect and understanding of Aboriginal culture through visitor education

Financial wellbeing

What is a 'product' and what is an 'experience'?

There are many words you will hear from people working in the tourism industry. 'Tell me about your tourism product' and 'what kind of visitor experience do you offer?' are examples of tourism language often used.

What is a product?

A tourism product is a combination of tangible and intangible elements such as natural, cultural and man-made resources, attractions, facilities, services and activities around a specific centre of interest. These represent the core of the destination marketing mix and create an overall visitor experience including emotional aspects for the potential customers.

A tourism product is priced and sold through distribution channels and it has a lifecycle. Simply, your product is the 'goods and services' you sell to visitors.

What is an experience?

The complete travel experience includes all the tourism needs that a visitor uses from the time they leave home, during their visit to the destination up until they return. This includes transport, accommodation, meals, tours and attractions as well as other activities. When you combine all of these products and needs, together this makes a visitor experience.

Tourism NT has a helpful glossary to explain some of the tourism language you may hear:

Definition of product and experience adapted from the Australian Tourism Toolkit, Tourism Australia.

Why do people travel?

Tourism is the travel of people (visitors) to a different place away from their home.

Different purposes for travel include:

As a holiday, time off from work to relax and experience somewhere different.

To visit family or friends.

For work purposes or business.

Visitor planning

When visitors are planning their travel they follow a visitor experience cycle from 'wishing' for a holiday through to planning, visiting and departing. As a tourism business it is important to connect with visitors at each of these stages.

“ We want to start their journey with them. They look at pictures of our Country, get excited and want to visit. Or maybe they hear about our story from family or friends who have visited us already. We make a connection – talk to them on the phone or email. Then it’s real, they arrive and we welcome them to our Country.

We make footprints together, share our knowledge, our stories, they meet our family and experience something they have never experienced before. Then they go home, taking a little bit of our spirit, our stories with them. They know much more than when they first arrived. ”
